Sensitivity: Confidential

Ms. Castillo,

In my opinion, a Mortgage Broker's License and any other real estate license ought to be treated the same. Please understand that our office does not have any authority to enforce departmental rules. Therefore, it's up to your department director to answer this question.

Subject: Mortgage Broker's License Question
Importance: High

Good Morning,

Ms. Veronica Mendoza has recently been promoted to Zoning Plans Processor 1, within the Zoning Plans Processing Section of our Department. Since she also has an active Mortgage Broker's License, Ms. Mendoza has asked if she has to de-activate her license, and if not, would she be able to utilize her license while performing the duties of her new position.

The outside employment information that we distribute to departmental employees makes reference to employees who currently have an active real estate license: "Employees who currently have an active real estate license will be permitted to maintain their license in active status. However, they may not use their license to engage in any outside employment, collect a commission or finder's fees, or any activity directly or indirectly related to their employment." Would a Mortgage Broker's License be considered the same?

Thank you,

Hilda Castillo, Personnel Manager
