Jay,

It isn't a problem at all. Due to the fact your wife is not a County employee, there is no conflict if she were to participate as part of the RFP presentation team. Furthermore, she is not considered to be transacting business with the County because she is contracting with Barry University, not Miami-Dade County. Finally, I agree with your assessment that you should have nothing to do with this contract, assuming it is awarded, other than handling routine administrative tasks that you might perform for any other contractor.

If you have any additional questions, please feel free to contact me.

Thanks,

Robert

Dear Robert,

Sorry to trouble you again - my wife is sub contracting with Barry University for a Diversity Training program which is being run by Fair Employment Practices (not ERD). There is an RFP presentation the Barry group will give today and a possibility they could be awarded this contract. I have no contact with any of the parties involved with this and there should be no crossing of our paths should the Barry group do this training. But to be on the safe side, do I need to notify anyone or fill out any forms or is there any conflict of interest that should be of concern? Also note, Barry does a Human Resource certificate training for the County and my wife teaches that course also. You advised earlier there should be no problem with that.

Thank you for your time,
