I received a call from Carol Kobel with the county's Department of Juvenile Services during the week of October 13-17. She asked about an employee would received a check of $1,300 from a company after she attended a conference. Apparently, she had helped to establish a program and the company was paying her for her efforts. The company is not a County vendor, but she had not agreed in advance to accept payment for the work she had undertaken. I advised her that the check should be returned to the company, as it didn't seem appropriate for either the employee or the county department to retain it.
